Definitions

Definitions of some jurisprudential concepts related to family conflict or mentioned in the form

The following definitions are in accordance with jurisprudential encyclopedias of the school of the progeny of the Prophet, peace be upon them. There may be disagreements among different jurists regarding some details, in which case the applicant should follow the religious authority he or she emulates.

- Raj'i (revocable) divorce: This type of divorce happens at the will of the husband. He says in the presence of two witnesses with true intention: "Zawjati taliq" (My wife is divorced). The divorced woman is considered a wife until the time of iddah passes, and the husband can void the divorce by saying or doing what shows that he has returned to his wife so long as the time of iddah has not passed. The divorced wife should stay at her husband's house during the time of iddah, and the husband cannot expel her from his house. Also, she cannot leave the house without the husband's permission. If she does so, she is considered a nashiz (insubordinate wife) and cannot claim nafaqah (financial support).
- Mubarat divorce: This type of divorce happens because of mutual aversion and hatred between husband and wife, and it involves bathl (the wife transfers ownership of some property to her husband in return for getting the divorce). The parties cannot go back to each other without a new marriage contract, even during the time of iddah.
- Khula' divorce: This type of divorce happens at the request of the wife who hates her husband so much that she is afraid she would commit the impermissible act of not providing her husband's rights. As a result, she asks her husband to divorce her. The divorce takes place by the wife offering bathl and the husband accepting and divorcing her. They cannot return to each other without a new marriage contract, even during the time of iddah.
- Judicial divorce: This type of divorce takes place at the order of the religious judge because of the wife taking her case to him because her husband does not provide her rights. The husband and wife cannot return to each other without a new marriage contract, even during the time of iddah.
- Iddah: A period a wife observes after getting divorced or widowed during which she cannot get married. That is because the divorced woman is considered a wife until the end of her iddah, while the widow needs to mourn her husband for a period.
- Iddah of a divorced woman: To see the blood (menstruate) three times. Thereafter, her iddah time is over. Iddah begins at the time of divorce, not at the time she knew of it, even if she did not find out that she had gotten divorced for a long period of time.
- Iddah of a pregnant woman: Until she gives birth
- Iddah of a woman who does not menstruate because of a disease or some other reason: Three months
- Iddah of a widow if she is not pregnant: Four months and ten days from the time she knew her husband had died, even if she found out about the death of her husband after a long period of time
- Iddah of a woman divorced by religious judge: To see the blood (menstruate) three times.
- Iddah of ya'is (postmenopausal woman): No iddah
- Iddah of a wife who never had sexual intercourse with her husband: No iddah
